Industry: Media/Publishing

Client Overview

Access Copyright, The Canadian Copyright Licensing Agency, is a not-for-profit agency established in 1988 by Canadian publishers and creators to license public access to copyright works. The agency now represents a vast international repertoire along with more than 8,000 Canadian creators and publishers.

Client Objectives

Access Copyright planned to update their systems and services to improve public access to copyright materials and facilitate the smooth distribution of funds to Canadian publishers and creators of great Canadian literary works. Its ambitious plan called for a complete revamp of all core systems and enhancements of their business processes. They needed a partner that could understand their complex business rules, licensing and distribution models, and the ability to design and deliver a complete solution.

Proc case Contribution

Proc case worked closely with the senior management at Access Copyright to understand their business and how they wanted to enhance it. Proc case designed a custom web-based solution, the Rights Management System (RMS), to automate copyright license purchases. Authors and creators are allowed to set prices for their own license sales and track sales and income.

Proc case was able to automate all functions and tightly integrate an Oracle Financials system with the RMS application to distribute funds to all the content creators and the entire literary community in Canada.

Access Copyright now functions with a highly automated, end-to-end business solution. Internal processes and information flow are significantly enhanced. License purchasers and content creators alike have access to improved services and information.

Technology

Microsoft web technology, Oracle database, Oracle application server, Oracle Applications

Results

Proc case Consulting delivered an end-to-end solution with a tailored web solution and an integrated financial system. Access Copyright has improved services and information flow to their users and the literary community it was created to serve.
